Where Owaa shows a range, the low end is its cheapest number type in that country (usually landline) and the high end the dearest (usually mobile or premium). Our figures are for a mobile, the dearer case for us. "Best bundle" = Owaa's $60 top-up, which gives 20% extra credits.

Read before comparing

- Ours is cost, theirs is a retail price. Owaa's rate includes its profit, support and hosting. Ours leaves out server hosting, GST, the US number ($1.15/month) and any margin we would add if we sold it.
- Billing. Owaa bills in 30-second steps, rounded up to a full minute, needs a $10 minimum top-up, and holds 5 minutes of credit while a call runs (returned after). Credits never expire. Twilio bills us per started minute from a prepaid balance; Gemini by the length of the audio.
- Features in Owaa's price: 110+ languages, the caller's own voice kept, a phone hotline (no browser needed), recordings and transcripts. Ours: 76 languages, Gemini's voice, browser caller, live captions on screen.
- Where the gap is: at Owaa's cheapest rates it is 3–4.5× our cost for India, the USA, Europe and Singapore, and rises to 12–25× for dearer UK and German numbers. For Gulf calls it narrows to 1.3–2.2×, because the phone leg is most of our cost there too.
